SUPERVISORS OF HENRICO TAKE PART IN SCHOOL ROW

Rescind Resolution for Apportionment of Funds From Annexation Account.

SALE OF GLEN LEA SCHOOL

Citizens Will Appeal to Court to Refuse Confirmation and Will Seek to Have Entire Contract Declared Null and Void.

Following the sale Tuesday of the Glen Lea School, in Henrico County, to the city of Richmond for $19,000, to paid out of funds awarded by court the Highland Park School District under the annexation agreement which went into effect last November, the Board of Supervisors of Henrico County at a special meeting yester-day rescinded its resolution directing the treasurer of the county to transfer to the accounts of the several school districts the amount awarded school districts the amount awarded the county under these proceedings, and directed that the moneys not al-ready collected be collected by the treasurer and held subject to the future order of the board.

The school was put up at auction Tuesday at Henrico Courthouse and bid Tuesday at Henrico Courthouse and bid in by Chairman Ebel, of the City School Board, his offer being the only bid submitted. Citizens of Henrico County and already protested the sale of the property, and had retained Attorney Haskins Hobson to protect their interests. Notice that steps to have the sale declared null and yold was served. sale declared null and void was served on City Clerk August, upon Chairman Ebel, of the City School Board, and upon Amestant City Attorney Ander-

ARRANGEMENT BY WHICH CITY WAS TO PAY FOR PROPERTY

The arrangement under which the city agreed to pay for the property is unusual. Under the annexation agreement the city was directed by the court to pay to the Highland Park School District about $70,000 for its school property. All of Highland Park was taken into the city except two small parcels of land, in one of which is located the Glen Lea School. NEGRO CAPTURED IN ACT OF ROBBING DRUG STORE drug store at Cary Street and Allen Avenue, came from behind his prescription counter yesterday afternoon and saw a burly negro rummaging through a counter drawer the druggist at once declared war. There was no ultimatum issued. Chitty simply attacked.

And as the negro turned to meet the attack the druggist saw that he had in his hand a roll of bills which had been left in the drawer by him for safekeeping. This probably caused Dr. Chitty to press the battle. But the negro was strong and also flerce, and, negro was strong and also herce, and, in spite of the druggist's efforts, he was getting the worst of the battle within a short time. The negro knocked him off a few feet distant and then made a break for the door.

But right there is where Policemar Krug comes in. In fact, Krug got ir before the negro got out. There wa before the negro got out. There was a short tussle, and the officer soon had the negro subdued. Chitty told Krug what had taken place, and also informed the officer that the negro had his roll, containing $75. He and the officer searched the man's pockets thoroughly, but without result. They then gave their attention to a more exhaustive search of his cluthers was tucked away in a trousers leg, they found the roll. The man had dropped It down the waistband of his trousers.

Krug sent the negro to the Second Police Station. He gave the name of William Massey, and he will be arraigned in the Police Court this morning on the charge of stealing the money.

AMUSEMENTS

We'll touch wood for safety's sake, but the Lyric seems to have formed the habit of presenting good bills. The one offered for the latter half of the week is exceptionally strong, or would be if so many others of late hadn't been particularly good.

There's no use trying to pick the headliner; it isn't pickable; you just take your choice of three or four. If the man of the Bell and Caron team had a partner worthy of him, his act would be without fault. As it is, it is a tip-top turn, because the man is a comedian of sorts and an acrobat and tumbler extraordinary. He has and tumbler extraordinary. He has one flip that the eye can hardly folengaging personality.

"Springtime" is a tabloid musical comedy, presented in good form by four men and three women. No one of the seven is startling, but all are satisfactory; if the ballad-singing were omitted, the act would be improved. A large part of the audience last night seemed to be amused by the sketch of Brennan and Carr, "Fun on the Docks," which contains several mechanical devices.
